EXPECT CENTRAL NAVY YARD PLAN

WASHINGTON-The coming report of the special naval board of which Rear Admiral Swift is chairman, it is declared, will submit recommendations to the sec-retary of the navy that will revolutionize the operation of American navy vards.

It is not known definitely whether these recommendations advance the proposition that certain navy yards be abandoned, but it is generally believed that consolidation is advocated.

The officials of the navy department refuse to give any idea what the report will be, but experts are of the opinion that concentration will be the burden economy, better results and facilities to handle the dreadnoughts.

THE AUCTION SALES Nevada Cons...... 2816

It is conceded by handlers of wool in the seaboard markets that in all prob- Parrot .. ability the highest prices of the year 1909 have been realized and that the quietude now prevailing presages a continued fairly easy tone during the few remaining weeks to New Year's.

One factor in the situation has some influence in this general direction. It is evident to those who look over the current offerings that they have been drawn upon to an extent which has lowered somewhat their average of quality, as well as lessened their available quantity, and asking prices that were quotable ear. lier in the season are no longer regarded as a possible sale level for the remaining holdings.

There is no very pronounced reces-relaxing of tension that has occurred, and it would take only moderate expansion of demand beyond the normal requirements, it is estimated, to renew the strong basis that characterized midsummer transactions, even though the top price level might not be restored.

A feature of the western situation, as la natural sequence to the high prices obtainable during the past two years or so in primary markets for wool, is the statement, coming from Montana railroad men, that the shipping of sheep to eastern markets has been particularly dull this fall, owing to the high prices that prevail for them in Montana and other Northwestern sections

It is added that this result has probably been brought about "by the good ....102 % 102 % 102 % 10 % prices paid for wool this year, and from ... 51% {2 51½ 52 the fact that many new companies have but yielded fractionally. Other important railroad issues showed some U S Steel 88% 89% 87% 89% gone into the industry, and the flocks will be kept through the winter."

As has been the case for the past five or six weeks, the woolen manufacturers continue to show greater interest in available supplies than the worsted goods concerns do, and their bookings of orders are far more satisfactory than they expected them to be for the year. The outlook is favorable also for 1910, according Fabrics for next year's fall trade have Am opened on a high level, although not extremely high in proportion to the cost of raw material, both for men's wear goods and dress goods. Imported as well as domestic textiles are reflecting the increase in cost of production.

In view of these circumstances it is not improbable that the relative strength of the two types of raw material will undergo further change to the advantage of that which is most suitable for woolen

The London wool auctions that opened Tuesday with about 100,000 bales offering, were awaited with great interest, and the uncertainty that attached to forecasts regarding the course of the market has undoubtedly exerted a quiet. ing effect to some extent lately upon con-

The opening day's offerings numbered 6871 bales and they were readily absorbed. Merinos sold at unchanged rates and crossbreds realized 5 per cent more than at the previous series. Coarse crossbreds showed improvement, the bulk be ing taken by American buyers, who also took a few merinos. Faulty merinos were occasionally 5 per cent under the pre vious sale.

RHODE ISLAND

Expected That in Early Part of Next Month Mines Will Be Producing at the Rate of Thirty Tons Per Day.

STOCK IS ACTIVE

Rhode Island Coal sold off this week in sympathy with other stocks and has been rather active around 101/2 and 11. This price is still above par, $10, and its strength is probably due to the fact that the company will soon be recorded among the producing anthracite mines of the country, for early in December it will be mining about 30 tons per day.

In itself 30 tons of coal per day is not large; but in the case of a new mine it is significant in that a coal mine which can begin operations on such a scale can readily increase to much larger figures. In the case of the Rhode Island Coal Company it indicates that the property is about to prove all that the management has claimed and that eventually

Rhode Island coal will be ranked among

New England's leading industries. In view of the fact that the executive head of the company is one of New England's foremost capitalists the development of the property has been along business lines and the object of bringing | 4 the mine to the producing stage accompished in less than a year. Within another 12 months the contrast of the I condition of the mine with its present state will be even more striking than the present condition is with that of a

The mine is now clear of water. While pumping, the management was busy proving the value of the seams, and not only have the three previously known Ne beds been proved to be continuous but Op several new ones were discovered varying from four to seventeen feet thick.

Thirty miners are now employed and No the number will be increased as necessity requires. The foundation of the Ne breaking plant is being laid and dwellings for the miners are being built. When the mine was previously worked

When the mine was previously the difficulty was to burn the coal. This the difficulty was to burn the coal. This is now the easiest part of the proposition. Considering that between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000 tons of anthracite are consumed annually in New England, the company will likely find a ready market for its product.

GARDENING IN THE SUBURBS

BACK YARD OF A SUBURBAN HOME IN LONDON, ONTARIO.

Not every back yard in a suburban home has such beautiful trees as are shown here, but much can be done in the plainest scrap of lawn if love and a hearty good will go to the effort. The flowers and plants and tending the minia-ture landscape that beauty may have an abode there is a far better occupation for a lady's leisure than many things to which modern society allures her. Here, too, is time and place for quiet thought and interchange of earnest talk, and lessons to be read in the faithful flowering of plants, the confident homing of birds and the peace of sunny skies. Even in winter when earth seems barren there is the arching blue to be seen and the crisp light of stars at night.

The pineapple blossom does not amount to much in size, but it is of a pretty purplish blue and its appearance on the plant is interesting to watch. The pineapple is a composite fruit, each one of the little geometrical divisions surrounding an eye, representing a unit of its structure. The first sign of the formation of a fruit is the appearance of a tiny "crown" which develops slowly into a miniature of the matured pinapple; the blue blossoms come out, a tiny flower at each "eye," while the fruit is still small, disappearing long before it has attained its full size.

Probably quite contrary to popular belief, a field of pineapples is a beautiful sight. Artists have painted the cabbage fields of Holland for their peculiar grayish bloom. Any artist with a love for beautiful tints would be delighted with a pinespple plantation.

Rare Coins

A penny of the reign of Baldred of Kent (A. D. 806-825) was unearthed in the neighborhood of Guildford by a man who, desiring to preserve it as a keepsake, committed an act of vandalism, from the collectors' point of view, by boring a hole through it so as to wear it on his watchchain. It was afterward purchased from him by a local connoisseur who took more satisfactory means to preserve it.

Another coin, an Exeter half crown of the reign of Charles I., was found in an old thatched roof of a cottage near Bovey. It subsequently changed hands for double its face value, and later on for £30:—London Chronicle.

EDITORIAL

Boston, Mass., Friday, November 26, 1909.

High Cost of Living Everywhere AMERICANS may be surprised to learn that, as a matter of fact, they are at the present time less seriously affected than the people of many other countries by the general advance in the cost of living. All of those things which are regarded as necessaries are higher today in the British Isles and on the continent than they have ever been before, and in every country the rise is attributed to a different cause, or to some cause of ascribed local or national origin. As to the condition referred to itself, the statements made by a correspondent writing from Vienna are illustrative and typical. He says that in the Austrian capital there is a general outcry of the populace against the steady rise in prices of almost all the so-called necessities of life. Within three years the price of milk has been raised twice, without the excuse of fodder or cattle being more expensive than they were. Meat is beyond the reach of people of moderate incomes. Eggs, butter, flour, potatoes, everything in the vegetable line, have risen in price within the last year.

Similar reports come from London, Paris, Berlin and other great centers of population. Strange to say, complaints regarding the increased cost of living come even from China and Japan.

In the United States the combines and trusts are blamed to a large degree for the rise in prices, but it is easily seen that these combines and trusts could not be successful were it not for a shortage in the supply of breadstuffs and of all those articles which enter into the food supply of the people. The high prices prevail in countries where the combine and trust are practically unknown.

Careful and thorough investigation will show without question that a condition which is common enough to be called universal is due to a common cause—the phenomenal rise of industrialism during the last twenty years. There has been a great increase in the production of the precious metals. This has marvelously increased the world's capital. This capital, in turn, has sought employment, and it has found an outlet mainly in the establishment and expansion of manufacturing industries. The inducement offered to labor by these establishments has had a twofold result—it has taken men from the fields and it has increased their ability to purchase. The surplus of agricultural production has been gradually diminishing until within the last few years it has been transformed into a deficit. The balance has been disturbed. People everywhere are consuming more foodstuffs than they are producing.

A readjustment must take place. If it be a rational one it will come without a shock. There must be everywhere a return to the soil. No legislative or doctrinaire panacea will prove as effectual as encouragement of the movement in this direction already begun.

THE municipal council of one of our Texas cities has ordained that hereafter full fare shall not be collected from strap-hangers, or, in other words, from those unable to find seats in the street cars. The despatch does not state how much fare this class of riders shall pay, although we are told that "full fare may be collected only when a seat is furnished." The lack of sitting accommodations on the street cars of the present day is a condition that has continued for so long that the public has virtually ceased to press its right to demand seats from transit companies. Need of protest, however, has by no means grown less, but has rather increased of late years, and perhaps it will soon reach a point where patience is no longer a virtue and reform will come.

Meanwhile, the commissions that have been appointed in many states to adjust various matters relating to the public service corporations have made no little headway in bringing out better conditions. In New York particularly, the public has been well served by its commission, and in Pennsylvania a number of matters have been regulated in such a way as to satisfy all concerned that public interests are being advanced. In Philadelphia, the railroad commissioners have recently ordered the transit company to keep the front platforms of its cars clear. This will undoubtedly have the effect of making travel more safe and sure, although it will tend to increase the crowding of the cars inside. If the company will in turn run more cars during rush hours, two advantages will have been gained instead of one. Reforms are necessarily slow, and popular impatience is a good lever to bring out a better order of things if it is exercised in the right direction and is not permitted to circumvent public gain.

The Postal Banks, an Insurgent Issue

The hopes of thousands of sympathizers with the "insurgent" movement in the middle West are bound up in the aggressive leadership of Representative Victor Murdock of Kansas. He is able, energetic, courageous and popular. In the House he stands for practically everything the Republican organization is opposed to. To come up to the expectations of his friends and admirers it seems necessary that he shall

"force the fighting" at the coming session. The Republican party stands unqualifiedly committed to the postal savings bank proposition. President Taft stands unqualifiedly committed to it. There is scarcely an organization Republican in the House who would openly declare against it. Representative Murdock, in common with all his associates, regardless of faction or party, is aware, however, that it is the intention of the Republican organization to prevent the postal savings bank bill from being reported during the long session. He is determined that it shall be reported.

Representative Weeks of Massachusetts will have charge of the measure as chairman of the House postoffice committee. It is understood that he is strongly in favor of withholding it until the monetary commission shall have made its report. In this position there is no doubt he will be supported by the organization, its leaders holding that there is no occasion for hurrying postal savings bank legislation, and that, indeed, it would be discourteous to the monetary commission to act upon it pending the submission of its report.

Mr. Murdock and his associate insurgents are entertaining no illusions with relation to the attitude of the monetary commission toward the postal savings bank plan. There is no likelihood that the commission will report favorably upon it. Therefore, so far as the friends of the measure are concerned the fight on the bill might as well be made in the long as in the short session; first or last it will have to be a fight within the party; and now as well as at any time, so the insurgents believe, it should be made an issue that will determine whether or not the present domination of the Republican majority in Congress shall continue.

It is no difficult matter to sum up. The organization managers as well as the insurgents understand full well that any contest raised over the postal savings bank bill will mean a fight not only for the control of the Republican party in Congress but in the nation. The power of the organization will, therefore, if necessary, be used to crush Representative Murdock and his associates. So that while the insurgent leader in the House and his followers may make a brave struggle they may make a losing one. But this will not lessen the country's interest in the final outcome, which will be determined not in the House but at the polls.

The All-Red Route Ir Blacksod bay, County Mayo, is the nearest accessible British harbor to Canada, the key to the All-Red Route scheme lies in the construction of a railroad linking London with that future Atlantic terminus. As the British government has now decided to grant $675,000 toward the construction of the last stretch, from Collooney, County Sligo, to Blacksod bay, the recognition of this link by the Canadian government is all that is required for the construction to be started. It now remains to be seen how the scheme is viewed in the report of the assistant postmaster-general of Canada as the result of his tour through Australia and New Zealand. With the completion of the short Blacksod railroad line, London can be reached in fourteen hours without change, by the railroad of the west of England, the ferry steamers to the east coast of Ireland, and an unbroken railroad across the island to the Atlantic. When the project came up during the time when the British premiers were discussing the question of the accelerated mail and passenger service, resolutions were received by the government from numerous public bodies throughout the country and all the Irish members heartily supported the plan. It was recognized that by connecting Blacksod bay with the railroad - system of the country, and thereby with that of England and Scotland and the continent, transatlantic traveling will not only lose many of its inconveniences but also a large part of its cost. In the chain by which the All-Red Route will bind Great Britain and her over-sea colonies, Ireland would thus form one of the strongest

It is interesting to note from the approximate time-table of the All-Red Route that the entire journey from London to New Zealand is not expected to take more than twenty-two and one-half days and to Australia twenty-five and one-half days. This is largely based on the assumption that the trip between Ireland and Halifax, N. S., will be made in three and one-half days, making the journey between London and Vancouver not more than eight days. The steamers on the Pacific are much less rapid, and furthermore the voyage between British Columbia and New Zealand is broken twice -at Honolulu, H. I., and at Suva, Fiji Islands. The fact that Hawaii is included in the time-table practically invalidates the British claim to an All-Red Route, but on the other hand it tends to emphasize the grandeur of the British empire through the circumstances that Hawaii is the only non-British point that cannot be excluded from such a colossal scheme. By both the Suez and the Cape routes the British antipodes can be reached without touching a single port where the Union Jack does not fly. Besides the British console themselves with the fact that the only foreign flag encountered on the quasi-All-Red Route is the twin banner of Anglo-Saxondom.

If you feel inclined that way, and will send in your name to the monetary commission, you can get yourself in line for a chance to read the fifty-two separate volumes that have been prepared with reference to the currency question. Do not bother about a coupon.

SINCE the United States has ceased to be the foremost exporter of live stock to the old world, ceding that place to Latin America, the inference is legitimate that the time is approaching when this country will in turn import cattle on a large scale. This is a matter of timely interest because the Central American crisis happens to bring sharply into focus one of the most promising cattle-raising countries in the western hemisphere. There is in fact no region more convenience.

phere. There is in fact no region more conveniently situated—one might say more manifestly destined—to supply the American market with live stock than the republic of Honduras.

The Future

Honduras

At this time it is becoming more and more evident that only a strong economic foothold north of Nicaragua, such as the United Fruit Company represents south of that storm center, will provide the necessary basis for supervision by the United States. Such a foothold in Honduras will control the entire east coast of Nicaragua, the short outlet of Guatemala toward the Atlantic, and especially Fónseca bay, where Honduras, Nicaragua and Salvador meet on the Pacific. That Honduras holds the key to Central American control has never been more patent than since the advent of Zelaya.

The Atlantic coast of Honduras has everal fair harbors and is less than a thousand miles from New Orleans and Mobile. Steamer connection is good, but up-to-date communication between the interior and the ports is far more backward than in any other Central American republic and the development of the country is only barely begun. The greatest obstacle to rapid development at the present time is the exclusion of Honduran cattle from the United States markets. The reasons for this exclusion are said no longer to exist and the present interest in Central American matters may help to bring about a revision of the commercial relations between the United States and the little republic.

The large department of Colon on the coast and Olancho in the interior toward Nicaragua are especially adapted to cattle raising. They are well watered; they produce various kinds of grass; and two crops of corn are easily grown during the year. It is certain that with the United States market available, the industry will be profitable without requiring more than a fair amount of capital. Meanwhile there are various projects on foot for constructing railroads and establishing wireless telegraphy, projects that are bound to attract the wide attention to which they are entitled as soon as Americans are thoroughly awakened to the Central American issue.

Better Times Worldwide Reports received by the department of commerce and labor indicate that the commercial improvement so noticeable here is worldwide. The revival of trade is not so general or so pronounced in other countries as it is in this, but the reports of foreign commerce received from many of them show that depression has given place to activity, while in some instances the increases announced in imports and exports over last year are as remarkable as they are satisfying. The department in laying this good news before the American public goes into details, and these are interesting whether they relate to improved conditions on this continent, in Argentina or in Canada, or in the leading nations of Europe and Asia. Here and there is evidence of the fact that the recovery is slow, but the satisfying thing is that even where it is slowest it is steady and with good prospects, of greater improvement as the months go by.

So closely are nations and their interests knit together now that it is impossible for one to be affected favorably or unfavorably by any condition without to some extent influencing all. There can be no question that the good times in the United States are making themselves felt in all other countries at present, just as our panic of two years ago caused worldwide commercial and industrial disturbance and stagnation.

Because the interests of the nations are more closely interwoven than ever before, man's responsibility to his brother everywhere is growing to be more plainly evident in the ordinary affairs of life. And it is pleasant to know at this Thanksgiving season that the prosperity for which we as a people have reason to feel so grateful is being shared or will be shared by humanity the world over.

Whether the great railroad managers of the country are justifiably or needlessly alarmed over the attitude of the present administration toward their properties only time can determine, but there is the danger that before time may have an opportunity to determine it, serious harm may be done, not only to the railroads, but to the business interests of the country. The Taft administration feels that it is in-duty bound to Railroads and the Administration carry out the Roosevelt policies. This means, so far as the railroads are concerned, the enactment of laws that in the estimation of leading railroad men will work irreparable injury to the transportation companies. For example, Mr. Taft, as already announced, is going to urge strongly upon Congress the advisability of substituting a special court to be composed of five men expert in such matters for dealing with rates, this court to have power, among other things, to suspend any new rate the railroads may make "until it is found to be reasonable." If found not to be reasonable, of course, it cannot go into effect legally.

If the government owned the railroads it could not very well be given more complete control than such a law would enable it to exercise over them. Under such a law the "railroad court," as the proposed new judicial body has been called, would have power to cut down to the last vestige, or even to destroy, the profits of freight hauling, even to the bankrupting of the corporations. To say that of course it would not go as far as this will hardly be a satisfying assurance to the thousands who have their sayings invested in railroad securities. All they would consider is the possibility of the government taking the management of the railroads out of the hands of their managers and owners.

Such is the case from one viewpoint. From the other it is regarded, naturally, as an evidence of good faith—that is, as an evidence of the fact that Mr. Taft is going to keep his ante-election promises and stand by the Roosevelt policies.

Congress, however, remains to be considered, as well as the mighty force of public opinion that stands opposed to a revival of the industrial agitation from which the country is only just recovering.
